Summer 2021

Professor Marilou McKenna mckenna@yorku.ca email inquiries answered within 24 hrs during the week telephone appointments can be arranged with the instructor  Time: Wednesday 18:00-21:00  Pelivery Format: REMOTE — (synchronous delivery) — There are scheduled meeting times for this course. Students should plan to be available for course-related activities during the appointed times.  Description: This course explores the reflexive relationship between form and content as expressed in three major literary genres: poetry, prose narrative, and drama. We shall seek to understand the distinctive qualities and conventions of each genre as we examine in detail how the parts of various texts, from chapter divisions to word choice, are selected, put together, and arranged to make meaning. Within each genre, we shall focus our attention on specific forms: the sonnet and/or the ballad form in poetry, shorter and longer fiction in prose narrative, and tragedy and/or comedy in drama. We shall seek out commonalities and differences between these forms by asking the following kinds of questions: What does the sonnet form have in common with the short story? How is a short story different from a novel, and what drives writers to select one form over another to suit their creative purposes? Through weekly on-line lectures, in conjunction with a weekly on-line discussion forum, the course will assist students with developing critical skills in literary analysis as well as specific reading strategies that they	AP/EN 1006 3.0B (SU)	Writer's Introduction to Literary Forms email inquiries answered within 24 hrs during the week telephone appointments can be arranged with the instructor  Wednesday 18:00-21:00  REMOTE — (synchronous delivery) — There are scheduled meeting times for this course. Students should plan to be available for course-related activities during the appointed times.  Description:  This course explores the reflexive relationship between form and content as expressed in three major literary genres: poetry, prose narrative, and drama. We shall seek to understand the distinctive qualities and conventions of each genre as we examine in detail how the parts of various texts, from chapter divisions to word choice, are selected, put together, and arranged to make meaning. Within each genre, we shall focus our attention on specific forms: the sonnet and/or the ballad form in poetry, shorter and longer fiction in prose narrative, and tragedy and/or comedy in drama. We shall seek out commonalities and differences between these forms by asking the following kinds of questions: What does the sonnet form have in common with the short story? How is a short story different from a novel, and what drives writers to select one form over another to suit their creative purposes? Through weekly on-line lectures, in conjunction with a weekly on-line discussion forum, the course will assist students with developing critical skills in	Course Director:	Professor Marilou McKenna
Time:  Wednesday 18:00-21:00  REMOTE — (synchronous delivery) — There are scheduled meeting times for this course. Students should plan to be available for course-related activities during the appointed times.  Description:  This course explores the reflexive relationship between form and content as expressed in three major literary genres: poetry, prose narrative, and drama. We shall seek to understand the distinctive qualities and conventions of each genre as we examine in detail how the parts of various texts, from chapter divisions to word choice, are selected, put together, and arranged to make meaning. Within each genre, we shall focus our attention on specific forms: the sonnet and/or the ballad form in poetry, shorter and longer fiction in prose narrative, and tragedy and/or comedy in drama. We shall seek out commonalities and differences between these forms by asking the following kinds of questions: What does the sonnet form have in common with the short story? How is a short story different from a novel, and what drives writers to select one form over another to suit their creative purposes? Through weekly on-line lectures, in conjunction with a weekly on-line discussion forum, the course will assist students with developing critical skills in		•
Time: Wednesday 18:00-21:00  REMOTE — (synchronous delivery) — There are scheduled meeting times for this course. Students should plan to be available for course-related activities during the appointed times.  Description: This course explores the reflexive relationship between form and content as expressed in three major literary genres: poetry, prose narrative, and drama. We shall seek to understand the distinctive qualities and conventions of each genre as we examine in detail how the parts of various texts, from chapter divisions to word choice, are selected, put together, and arranged to make meaning. Within each genre, we shall focus our attention on specific forms: the sonnet and/or the ballad form in poetry, shorter and longer fiction in prose narrative, and tragedy and/or comedy in drama. We shall seek out commonalities and differences between these forms by asking the following kinds of questions: What does the sonnet form have in common with the short story? How is a short story different from a novel, and what drives writers to select one form over another to suit their creative purposes? Through weekly on-line lectures, in conjunction with a weekly on-line discussion forum, the course will assist students with developing critical skills in Delivery Format:  REMOTE — (synchronous delivery) — There are scheduled meeting times for this course. Students should plan to be available for course-related activities during the appointed times.  This course explores the reflexive relationship between form and content as expressed in three major literary genres: poetry, prose narrative, and drama. We shall seek to understand the distinctive qualities and conventions of each genre as we examine in detail how the parts of various texts, from chapter divisions to word choice, are selected, put together, and arranged to make meaning. Within each genre, we shall focus our attention on specific forms: the sonnet and/or the ballad form in poetry, shorter and longer fiction in prose narrative, and tragedy and/or comedy in drama. We shall seek out commonalities and differences between these forms by asking the following kinds of questions: What does the sonnet form have in common with the short story? How is a short story different from a novel, and what drives writers to select one form over another to suit their creative purposes? Through weekly on-line lectures, in conjunction with a weekly on-line discussion forum, the course will assist students with developing critical skills in times for this course. Students should plan to be available for course-related activities during the appointed times.  This course explores the reflexive relationship between form and content as expressed in three major literary genres: poetry, prose narrative, and drama. We shall seek to understand the distinctive qualities and conventions of each genre as we examine in detail how the parts of various texts, from chapter divisions to word choice, are selected, put together, and arranged to make meaning. Within each genre, we shall focus our attention on specific forms: the sonnet and/or the ballad form in poetry, shorter and longer fiction in prose narrative, and tragedy and/or comedy in drama. We shall seek out commonalities and differences between these forms by asking the following kinds of questions: What does the sonnet form have in common with the short story? How is a short story different from a novel, and what drives writers to select one form over another to suit their creative purposes? Through weekly on-line lectures, in conjunction with a weekly on-line discussion forum, the course will assist students with developing critical skills in		, course-related activities during the appointed times.  This course explores the reflexive relationship between form and content as expressed in three major literary genres: poetry, prose narrative, and drama. We shall seek to understand the distinctive qualities and conventions of each genre as we examine in detail how the parts of various texts, from chapter divisions to word choice, are selected, put together, and arranged to make meaning. Within each genre, we shall focus our attention on specific forms: the sonnet and/or the ballad form in poetry, shorter and longer fiction in prose narrative, and tragedy and/or comedy in drama. We shall seek out commonalities and differences between these forms by asking the following kinds of questions: What does the sonnet form have in common with the short story? How is a short story different from a novel, and what drives writers to select one form over another to suit their creative purposes? Through weekly on-line lectures, in conjunction with a weekly on-line discussion forum, the course will assist students with developing critical skills in	Delivery Format:	., This course explores the reflexive relationship between form and content as expressed in three major literary genres: poetry, prose narrative, and drama. We shall seek to understand the distinctive qualities and conventions of each genre as we examine in detail how the parts of various texts, from chapter divisions to word choice, are selected, put together, and arranged to make meaning. Within each genre, we shall focus our attention on specific forms: the sonnet and/or the ballad form in poetry, shorter and longer fiction in prose narrative, and tragedy and/or comedy in drama. We shall seek out commonalities and differences between these forms by asking the following kinds of questions: What does the sonnet form have in common with the short story? How is a short story different from a novel, and what drives writers to select one form over another to suit their creative purposes? Through weekly on-line lectures, in conjunction with a weekly on-line discussion forum, the course will assist students with developing critical skills in		• and content as expressed in three major literary genres: poetry, prose narrative, and drama. We shall seek to understand the distinctive qualities and conventions of each genre as we examine in detail how the parts of various texts, from chapter divisions to word choice, are selected, put together, and arranged to make meaning. Within each genre, we shall focus our attention on specific forms: the sonnet and/or the ballad form in poetry, shorter and longer fiction in prose narrative, and tragedy and/or comedy in drama. We shall seek out commonalities and differences between these forms by asking the following kinds of questions: What does the sonnet form have in common with the short story? How is a short story different from a novel, and what drives writers to select one form over another to suit their creative purposes? Through weekly on-line lectures, in conjunction with a weekly on-line discussion forum, the course will assist students with developing critical skills in	Description:	• • • • prose narrative, and drama. We shall seek to understand the distinctive qualities and conventions of each genre as we examine in detail how the parts of various texts, from chapter divisions to word choice, are selected, put together, and arranged to make meaning. Within each genre, we shall focus our attention on specific forms: the sonnet and/or the ballad form in poetry, shorter and longer fiction in prose narrative, and tragedy and/or comedy in drama. We shall seek out commonalities and differences between these forms by asking the following kinds of questions: What does the sonnet form have in common with the short story? How is a short story different from a novel, and what drives writers to select one form over another to suit their creative purposes? Through weekly on-line lectures, in conjunction with a weekly on-line discussion forum, the course will assist students with developing critical skills in	2000.15110	This course explores the reflexive relationship between form distinctive qualities and conventions of each genre as we examine in detail how the parts of various texts, from chapter divisions to word choice, are selected, put together, and arranged to make meaning. Within each genre, we shall focus our attention on specific forms: the sonnet and/or the ballad form in poetry, shorter and longer fiction in prose narrative, and tragedy and/or comedy in drama. We shall seek out commonalities and differences between these forms by asking the following kinds of questions: What does the sonnet form have in common with the short story? How is a short story different from a novel, and what drives writers to select one form over another to suit their creative purposes? Through weekly on-line lectures, in conjunction with a weekly on-line discussion forum, the course will assist students with developing critical skills in		and content as expressed in three major literary genres: poetry, examine in detail how the parts of various texts, from chapter divisions to word choice, are selected, put together, and arranged to make meaning. Within each genre, we shall focus our attention on specific forms: the sonnet and/or the ballad form in poetry, shorter and longer fiction in prose narrative, and tragedy and/or comedy in drama. We shall seek out commonalities and differences between these forms by asking the following kinds of questions: What does the sonnet form have in common with the short story? How is a short story different from a novel, and what drives writers to select one form over another to suit their creative purposes? Through weekly on-line lectures, in conjunction with a weekly on-line discussion forum, the course will assist students with developing critical skills in		prose narrative, and drama. We shall seek to understand the divisions to word choice, are selected, put together, and arranged to make meaning. Within each genre, we shall focus our attention on specific forms: the sonnet and/or the ballad form in poetry, shorter and longer fiction in prose narrative, and tragedy and/or comedy in drama. We shall seek out commonalities and differences between these forms by asking the following kinds of questions: What does the sonnet form have in common with the short story? How is a short story different from a novel, and what drives writers to select one form over another to suit their creative purposes? Through weekly on-line lectures, in conjunction with a weekly on-line discussion forum, the course will assist students with developing critical skills in		distinctive qualities and conventions of each genre as we arranged to make meaning. Within each genre, we shall focus our attention on specific forms: the sonnet and/or the ballad form in poetry, shorter and longer fiction in prose narrative, and tragedy and/or comedy in drama. We shall seek out commonalities and differences between these forms by asking the following kinds of questions: What does the sonnet form have in common with the short story? How is a short story different from a novel, and what drives writers to select one form over another to suit their creative purposes? Through weekly on-line lectures, in conjunction with a weekly on-line discussion forum, the course will assist students with developing critical skills in		examine in detail how the parts of various texts, from chapter our attention on specific forms: the sonnet and/or the ballad form in poetry, shorter and longer fiction in prose narrative, and tragedy and/or comedy in drama. We shall seek out commonalities and differences between these forms by asking the following kinds of questions: What does the sonnet form have in common with the short story? How is a short story different from a novel, and what drives writers to select one form over another to suit their creative purposes? Through weekly on-line lectures, in conjunction with a weekly on-line discussion forum, the course will assist students with developing critical skills in		divisions to word choice, are selected, put together, and form in poetry, shorter and longer fiction in prose narrative, and tragedy and/or comedy in drama. We shall seek out commonalities and differences between these forms by asking the following kinds of questions: What does the sonnet form have in common with the short story? How is a short story different from a novel, and what drives writers to select one form over another to suit their creative purposes? Through weekly on-line lectures, in conjunction with a weekly on-line discussion forum, the course will assist students with developing critical skills in		arranged to make meaning. Within each genre, we shall focus tragedy and/or comedy in drama. We shall seek out commonalities and differences between these forms by asking the following kinds of questions: What does the sonnet form have in common with the short story? How is a short story different from a novel, and what drives writers to select one form over another to suit their creative purposes? Through weekly on-line lectures, in conjunction with a weekly on-line discussion forum, the course will assist students with developing critical skills in		our attention on specific forms: the sonnet and/or the ballad ties and differences between these forms by asking the following kinds of questions: What does the sonnet form have in common with the short story? How is a short story different from a novel, and what drives writers to select one form over another to suit their creative purposes? Through weekly on-line lectures, in conjunction with a weekly on-line discussion forum, the course will assist students with developing critical skills in		form in poetry, shorter and longer fiction in prose narrative, and ing kinds of questions: What does the sonnet form have in common with the short story? How is a short story different from a novel, and what drives writers to select one form over another to suit their creative purposes? Through weekly on-line lectures, in conjunction with a weekly on-line discussion forum, the course will assist students with developing critical skills in		tragedy and/or comedy in drama. We shall seek out commonali-common with the short story? How is a short story different from a novel, and what drives writers to select one form over another to suit their creative purposes? Through weekly on-line lectures, in conjunction with a weekly on-line discussion forum, the course will assist students with developing critical skills in		ties and differences between these forms by asking the follow-from a novel, and what drives writers to select one form over another to suit their creative purposes? Through weekly on-line lectures, in conjunction with a weekly on-line discussion forum, the course will assist students with developing critical skills in		ing kinds of questions: What does the sonnet form have in another to suit their creative purposes? Through weekly on-line lectures, in conjunction with a weekly on-line discussion forum, the course will assist students with developing critical skills in		common with the short story? How is a short story different lectures, in conjunction with a weekly on-line discussion forum, the course will assist students with developing critical skills in		from a novel, and what drives writers to select one form over the course will assist students with developing critical skills in		another to suit their creative purposes? Through weekly on-line lectures, in conjunction with a weekly on-line discussion forum, literary analysis as well as specific reading strategies that they		the course will assist students with developing critical skills in literary analysis as well as specific reading strategies that they can apply to answering these questions.		can apply to answering these questions.
Category: N/A	Category:	N/A
Historical Requirement: N/A	•
Requirements:  1) 3 Writing Exercises (3-4 double-spaced pages @ 20% each; 60% in total)	Requirements:	, , , <ul> <li>2) Final test (online, timed @ 20% held during the final class)</li> <li>3) Weekly participation in online discussion forum @ 20% (asynchronous activity)</li> </ul>

Reading List:	<ol> <li>All required texts will be available at the Yorku Bookstore.</li> <li>Whitla, William. The English Handbook: A Guide to Literary Studies (Wiley-Blackwell)</li> <li>Tyler, Anne. Dinner at the Homesick Restaurant (Ballantine)</li> <li>Additional reading material (eg., poetry and short fiction) will be available on eclass.</li> </ol>
Open To:	open