Required Course Package/Text: There should be a specific course package for this course in the bookstore, related to the textbook by Paul Krugman, Maurice Obstfeld, Marc Melitz, , International Finance, Theory and Policy, (11th edition), Pearson. The textbook is also fine, but we will be using only the second half of this textbook; the course package contains only the second half of the textbook.

Course updates and information: This is an in-person course, with in-person lectures and in person midterm and final exam. Information will be posted on the course website in Moodle. Check this site regularly as lecture slides, recent articles, announcements, and practice questions will be posted.

Grading:

Midterm : February 14, 2023, class time (50%)

Final Exam: Examination period (50%)

A doctor's note is required if you miss the midterm. There will be no makeup test; the marks will be re-allocated to the final exam.

Theme:

This course seeks to explain exchange rates and balance of payments imbalances, and why these issues are important. We also discuss issues of macroeconomic policy in an open economy and the link between internal economic objectives and external ones. It is demonstrated that the answers to these questions depend critically upon whether countries follow a fixed or flexible exchange rate regime. We then discuss theories and determinants of economic growth both domestically and internationally. This will include a discussion of the role played by international trade, foreign capital, and financial market development in the growth process, and the convergence hypothesis.

Chapters Covered:

Chapters 13-18, 20-22, other posted lecture slides, time permitting
